Both pastors and evangelists were appointed by the Committee and held their office from them. In the next year, 1867, it was arranged that each church should elect for itself deacons to be entrusted with the care of secular things. Thus were the first steps taken towards the establishment of an independent, self-supporting, and self-governing Church. In this year, too, seven other ordinations took place, chiefly of assistant missionaries, men designed to share the growing burdens of the extensive districts now under the charge of the European missionaries, for the burden was growing to be a large one. In 1870 the Christian adherents numbered 30, 969, with 210 preachers, besides 161 schools and over 5000 scholars. In Pareychaley alone there were over 1000 Christian adherents. The number of church members or communicants was 2331. In 1868 the Rev. James Emlyn came to...
