Excerpt: . . . by social injustice and mOTiTTgfor social reconstruction. And they wonder that the world is not saved! The ritualistic churches, trained in the compact social organization of feudalism, are in a better condition to grapple with social problems, as their larger social activities amply testify. As the turmoil of business competition has lapsed into the calm of monopolistic production, and as bourgeois property, with the prevalence of the corporate form of business enterprise, has taken on more and more a collective character, it might naturally be expected that the moral code of the trading class would show an increasing appreciation of social values. To some extent this expectation has been realized. Some of the more flagrant commercial abuses have received a moral condemnation, and a higher standard of business integrity and a keener sense of civic duty have been insisted upon. But, for the most...
